Birds Fly...The Ground Moves...Wind Blows: Emergency Preparedness for Community Health Centers

While most emergency situations are handled locally, when there is a major incident, Community and Migrant Health Centers play an important role. To effectively respond to emergencies, disasters, or acts of terrorism, centers must engage in preparation activities and partner with Public Health and other community agencies. This two-day conference, provided by a grant from the Washington Public Health Emergency Preparedness Response Department, will assist Community Health Centers in these activities.

Learning objectives from this conference

1. Identify Community and Migrant Health Center roles and response activities
2. Understand the partnership role for community linkage development
3. Understand the National Incident Management System and how it relates to Community Health Centers
4. Describe the information needed to create an Emergency Preparedness plan: sources of information and key components
5. Describe the process by which a plan is built.
6. Describe lessons learned in the development of a health care coalition
7. Review update information on Pandemic Flu
